

XM Radio should be allowed to provide what ever it's PAYING customers want to hear. It's a paid subscription and they're providing what the customer wants. There are plenty of subscriptions to magazines out there that have extreme views and even borderline on illegal, but they're allowed to provide what their customers want through freedom of speech. Well, so should XM Radio. How is it any different than a local news channel that reports on traffic & weather where 98% of their audience watches via cable TV. The customer is paying for that service much like a subscription. If XM Radio has to stop broadcasting weather & traffic, so should the networks carried on cable TV.
